

This year, 2019, brings on the 25th anniversary for Time Timer. What started as a one-woman show has grown to help students, parents, teachers, and professionals around the world. Jan Rogers, inventor and founder of Time Timer, didn't anticipate the far-reaching influence of her invention as she assembled those first timers.

Time Timer was inspired by Jan's youngest daughter to help her grasp the concept of time. But like many kids, transitions hit like bombshells and the ominous "five more minutes" warning wasn't much help. Whether it was time to get ready for school, do homework, attend practice or go to bed, Jan's daughter often felt frustrated and anxious because of her inability to grasp the concept of elapsed time.

Motivated to solve this universal problem, Jan created the Time Timer — an innovative, simple time management tool designed to "show" the passage of time using a patented red disk. As time elapses, the red disk disappears — making common routines at work, school or home stress-free and enjoyable.

Today, the Time Timer red disk is a globally recognized time management resource that helps people of all ages, abilities, and cultures “make every moment count.”
